

What Can You Do About High Property Taxes?

Property tax increases are directly related to the amount of money your local government requests for spending. Taxpayers have a voice in matters related to governmental spending through voting on local issues. It is important that taxpayers are aware of proposed increases in spending and realize the impact of such increases on their tax bill.

Property owners will only begin to see property tax relief when local government stops relying so heavily on the funds generated by property taxes.

If you are interested in helping curb government's over-reliance on property taxes, contact your state officials and voice your support of legislation which reduces dependence on property taxes with a dollar for dollar replacement of that revenue with a corresponding increase in state income tax.
